

Confessions of a Clairvoyant Housewife

I Used to be a Showgirl

June 5, 2014

I used to be a blonde bombshell. Tall, statuesque...with a cavalier attitude. I disco-ed, ate only during happy hour, dated...uh-hum...or pursued devilish “I discard my women after sex” type of men, danced on TV, was a showgirl in Las Vegas, went to college, studied “Foreign Affairs,” (and literally had them) then went to law school and met my eventual husband.

Fun. Exciting. Different. I have to admit I got a lot of life experience in a short amount of time. But then I married, had children...9 years apart, (why make it easy on myself?) and then began a new path, (throw in a few dogs, guinea pigs, extra pound puppies and all their veterinary needs!) My career was no longer centered about what I thought I would be. Rather it became a reflection of what I was meant to be. Stubborn. Controlling. Passionate. Reactive. An “Expert Human Emotional Coordinator,” Concierge, Counselor, Cook, and Carpooler. I was a Housewife!

So now in my 50's, I still like to think that I'm young, witty, sexy and alluring...and that all kinds of men find me attractive...so I do...however the only thing that has remained a constant is that I'm tall!

“Yeah but you're still a pretty momma!” says my wonderful daughter. And my son loves me too. And my husband must adore me because we've been together over 30 years. But we yell, banter and childishly bicker over stupid, idiotic things. (It's because he's so annoying!) Call it love.

Yet despite the wear and tear and physical abuse gravity and aging unfairly impose upon us, I am at a place in my life where I celebrate each day as a victory, a new beginning, and an invitation to participate!

From extra-large stretchy Wal-Mart underwear, to discount senior days, juvederm, and organic gluten-free cookies, I'm pretty easy to please! I've discovered that being happy is my choice, and one that is up to me to remember.

This is one of the many things I've learned while being “A Clairvoyant Housewife!”

Join me as I share my viewpoints, from angels and auras, to the afterlife, personal family drama, (along with menopausal and husband “why don't they get it?” complaints,) in the hopes of providing entertainment, inspiration and a new, fresh perspective about what it's like being a "Clairvoyant Housewife!"

Clairvoyant Viewpoint: Every idea is an expression of your soul. It's your Divine Commitment in realizing who you are, what your potential is, and who you were meant to be.

Affirmation: "I am safe, loved and provided for. I am always guided towards my highest good. I trust."

Cindy Goldenberg

Blog posts are based on book "Confessions of a Clairvoyant Housewife."